5	Is Architecture Art? Think for a minute about the word architecture. What words do you think of? Maybe you thought of building materials, styles, or different shapes and colors. How many of you thought of art? In fact, architecture is an art. Artists use shapes and colors in their work. Artists also use different materials and work in different styles. They make drawings with pen or pencil. They	9

paint with watercolor or oils. Some artist's work is very modern, yet others stills prefer more traditional styles. People have different opinions about both works of art and architecture.

The key point is, however, that there is a difference between architecture and other art form. People have to live and work in the buildings that architects design. We don't have to "live" in a painting. Our homes protect us from the weather. They keep us warm in the winter and dry when it rains. They protect us from other dangers on the outside, for example, other people who might want to hurt us in some way. Other buildings provide spaces for people to come together for public meetings, concerts, or sporting events. In other words, architecture is a useful art. We want the buildings we move around in every day to be beautiful, but they also have to be safe and comfortable.

To sum up, architecture is a form of art. It is creative and uses many of the same elements that artists use. People look at buildings and admire or criticize the way they look, just as they do with artwork. But a building also has to be useful and practical.
